It seems to me that in a day and age where the technology is available, the companies who provide the consumer with that technology should not be penalized. For individuals that travel long distances for their work or commute to work every day, the traffic and weather broadcasts are a valuable resource. The main reason I purchased satellite radio was to have what I wanted on the radio and when I wanted it. If I am traveling to San Francisco or L.A., why should I 1) have to wait to get into range or, 2) have to wade through all of commercials and inane D.J. talk to hear these reports?

XM provides a very good service and should not be censured.
